WE WANT YOU TO BECOME A VOICE FOR NATURE THIS EARTH DAY

Sir David Attenborough is the voice of the Planet Earth series. Through his lifetime of conservation work, he has become the unofficial voice for nature itself, because as remarkable, diverse and beautiful as it is, the natural world can't speak for itself. As Planet Earth III reminds us, the planet needs a voice now more than ever.

Simply talking about the problem might not sound like enough, but creating conversation that leads to change is the biggest thing we can all do to save our planet.

Use these thought starters below and the resources on the BBC Children in Need website to consider climate change and its prevention, and to discuss ways to inspire action against the environmental challenges facing our planet.

- Turning lights off when not using them
- Conserving water
- Making sure to recycle
- Walking or taking public transports instead of the car
- Shopping second-hand and only buying things you need
- Plant a tree or seeds
- Using your voice to educate friends and family on climate change

These are also a great source of inspiration for students who wish to Become a Voice for Nature – either by creating a piece of writing, a piece of artwork or a video or photography project. Start by writing your promise to the natural world below:
Take part and share

Take part and share your commitment to nature using our hashtag
#BecomeAVoiceForNature
this Earth Day, Monday
22nd April 2024.

CHILDREN B B C

