USE YOUR VOICE TO NARRATE PLANET EARTH III - TREEHOPPERS

Ever wondered what it would be like to narrate some of the incredible stories from Planet Earth III? We've added two of our favourite Planet Earth III video clips to the BBC Children in Need website or click here to watch and we'd love you to Become a Voice for Nature by narrating these yourselves!

We've removed Sir David Attenborough's famous voice from these clips, so when you press play use the subtitles and full script below to help you to re-voice these Planet Earth III stories.

Either have a go at narrating the whole clip yourself at home, or share out the lines below amongst your class and all take turns to Become a Voice for Nature!

- 1 In the Amazon, live many strange species.
- 2 This is a treehopper.
- 3 They not only have a bizarre appearance, but they also communicate in a remarkable way.
- 4 Vibrating their bodies, they send signals through the forest plants they live on.
- 5 And every sound has its own particular meaning.
- 6 This treehopper mother communicates with her young, encouraging them to stay together, so that she can protect them, for there are plenty here waiting to eat young treehoppers.
- 7 An assassin bug. Armed with piercing mouthparts and sticky front legs.
- 8 Capable of literally sucking the life out of her entire brood.
- 9 But she can't guard them all.
- 10 She needs help from friends in high places.
- 11 Bees.
- 12 They are very aggressive.
- 13 This is more than the assassin bug bargained for.
- 14 Mission accomplished. Her brood are safe.
- 15 The bees don't protect the treehoppers for free.
- 16 A little tickle on a treehopper's back, and they exude a sugary liquid, honeydew, a sweet reward for protecting them.
- 17 It's just one of the countless ways in which forest species work together.

USE YOUR VOICE TO NARRATE PLANET EARTH III - MACAQUES

Ever wondered what it would be like to narrate some of the incredible stories from Planet Earth III? We've added two of our favourite Planet Earth III video clips to the BBC Children in Need website or click here to watch and we'd love you to Become a Voice for Nature by narrating these yourselves!

- 1 These long-tailed macaques live in Bali.
- 2 Every morning, the troop heads for a building in the centre of their territory.
- 3 Tourists come here every day in crowds.
- 4 So the temple grounds are full of opportunities, if you know where to look.
- 5 There is a constant supply of hats and sunglasses.
- 6 But this harvest is not for eating... it's for bargaining.
- 7 Seems like a fair trade.
- 8 But there are greater rewards to be had... for those who know how to get them.
- 9 And this old male appears to be doing... very well.
- 10 He, and the other elders in this troop have both experience and knowledge.
- 11 They've been working the temple for over ten years and now concentrate on the big stuff.
- 12 No one wants to walk home with just one shoe.
- 13 And these old boys can't wait to get their hands on the latest tech.
- 14 The older males understand something the youngsters have yet to learn.
- 15 The art of the deal.
- 16 A banana? How dare you?
- 17 A bar of chocolate? That's better.
- 18 The real skill is in the negotiations.
- 19 The macaques are playing us at our own game.
- 20 They demand whatever they want.

A WINDOW TO NATURE

We'd all love to see a greener world from our window. Use this window outline to draw a landscape full of animals that would be wonderful to see.

Share your completed Window to Nature using our hashtag #BecomeAVoiceForNature this Earth Day, Monday 22nd April 2024.
